

Keith Swarner, Associate Professor in Computers, Information and Office Systems has taught computer technology and networking courses at the University of Alaska Fairbanks, Tanana Valley Campus since 1996. Prior to accepting a full-time teaching position in 1999, Keith spent six year providing computer technical support to several university departments. Keith has remained current in his field through training in networking basics, routers and routing basics, intermediate routing, and WAN technologies. He as also received training in the Fundamentals of Microsoft Windows 2000 and Windows Server 2003, Microsoft Active Directory Services, and Microsoft Network Infrastructure. Keith holds industry certifications in Cisco Systems technologies as a Cisco Certified Network Associate (CCNA) and a Cisco Certified Academy Instructor (CCAI); Microsoft technologies as a Microsoft Certified Systems Engineer (MCSE) in both Windows 2000 and Windows Server 2003; and CompTIA's Network+.